The art of dancing is of high antiquity, and its general utility was greatly prized by the ancients as an object of much importance. In Europe various governments enacted was ordering music and dancing to be introduced into their edwas ordering music and dancing to be introduced into their edwas ordering music and dancing to be introduced into their edwas ordering to be introduced into the control of their pupils, and guarding against the dangers of a too coy of their louds of the control of the control of their day, which often 'produced lassitude, deforming, and even imbeelfux. Thus, by a judicious blending of hymical with mental education, the schools in many parts of Europa rose to a most enaked position.

Socrates, Plato, Achilles, Pyrthus and Theseus, as also many other illustrious men, often diverted themselves by means of this art.
